PREFACE

For most Mauritians, Mauritian Creole is a non-language, a patois, some form of broken French. For me it is my mother tongue (first language), the language I heard when I was still in my mother's womb for it was the language my parents used. For over half a century, I have researched the language and used it with my wife, children and grandchildren. It is the medium of my creative writing – thousands of poems, dozens of plays and short stories, several novellas and novels (My complete works can be accessed free of charge at <https://boukiebanane.com>.) My second language is English, another creole language and through translation of religious and lay literature, I strive to show that my mother tongue is fit to express world literature – the Bhagavad-Gita, the Bible and the Holy Koran, Shakespeare, Molière, Blake, Keats etc. Enjoy this sample of world literature in our de facto national language and the future de jure national language to be known as Morisien (Mauritian) together with a new creation inspired by a world classic.
